

From Victim to Survivor: A Group for survivors of childhood trauma

This group is intended for those who have survived childhood trauma, sexual abuse, or incest and are looking for group support, as well as a way to process and share their story. The group is divided into a four phases which includes: establishing a safe place, breaking the silence, working through, and reintegration and termination. This group will cover coping skills, as well as provide education surrounding the impacts trauma can have on one's mind, body and spirit. This group will use a mixture of Narrative therapy, Cognitive-Behavioural Therapy and Mindfulness to help individuals address and process their traumatic memories, as well as provide a safe place for survivors to share their story.

Further, the program offers a structured protocol with session by session agendas containing worksheets, poems, practices and handouts integrating a trauma-focused treatment model. This group is intended to not only provided support and awareness for those who have survived childhood trauma, sexual abuse and incest but also to help individuals find their own path of healing. Ultimately, the group aims to support survivors in learning to connect with stories, emotions and thoughts as a form of healing.
